Results Mixed State's future looks a little less 'Bleeker'

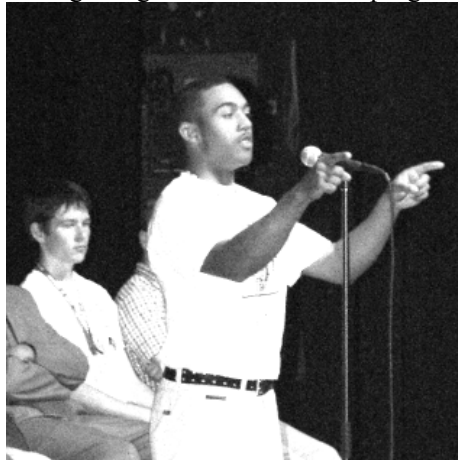

Andrew Cott
McCoy, Patton County

The people have spoken, the ballots are tallied, the results announced, and your 2003 Boys' State officials sworn in as the State leaders for the next four days. From whatever angle you choose look at it, the Nationalists are the clear victors and the party holding the decisive mandate as Boys' State rolls through the rest of the week. Fresh from their respective victories, the candidates offered the following comments about the campaign and the work that lies ahead.

Federalist Eric Buell will hold the Commissioner of Insurance post for the 66th edition of Boys' State. And while Buell did run unopposed in the general election, this is not to imply a lack of preparedness, ability, or competency for the position. Buell elaborated by sharing his plans for office, "My first order of business is to begin attracting new insurance companies to increase competition and decrease the cost of insurance". Taking the precarious current status of insurance in the state into consideration, best of luck to Buell in his efforts.

Nationalist Wade Walker was elected to the Treasury's post. Overcoming Hooker's masterful "I have a plan, I just don't know what it is" position in the debate, Walker got the ball rolling for the Nationalists in this afternoon's debate and translated his debate prowess into a secured state office. Said Walker of his initial plans for action, "My first order of business is to get together a state wide program for education and highways". He went on to note that he believed his superiority in the election stemmed from the fact that he is a "man of my word, and I know what needs to be done".

Bradley Cox, the lone Federalist to survive bipartisan competition in the generals, will serve as this year's Secretary of State. Voters evidently decided to "put a check in the box for Brad Cox", and

Cox said he believed it was because, "I'm straight up with people, and I just hope that's what they want to hear" and said that as his initial order of business he would, "create a disaster plan".

After a series of badly misplayed answers by Federalist Attorney General candidate Kevin Mullinix, Nationalist Keithley Lake took advantage and put his own stamp on the debate en route to his election as state Attorney General. Lake says that to begin his term, he would like to, "Begin prison reform and get more funding for education".

Finally, taking it's place as the crown jewel of the general elections, the governor was announced, and that person proved to be Nationalist Mardell Maxwell. In a purported landslide the Pershing County native put the proverbial "icing on the cake" for the Nationalist party. As for his first order of business, Maxwell concisely mentioned that he aims to "stabilize the state". Despite the 60-40 party split in favor of the Federalist party, it's clear that the Nationalists were able to make their voices heard across party lines and voice their message through able, appealing candidates. With state offices locked in, it's time to sit back and watch which direction the Nationalists steer this year's government.

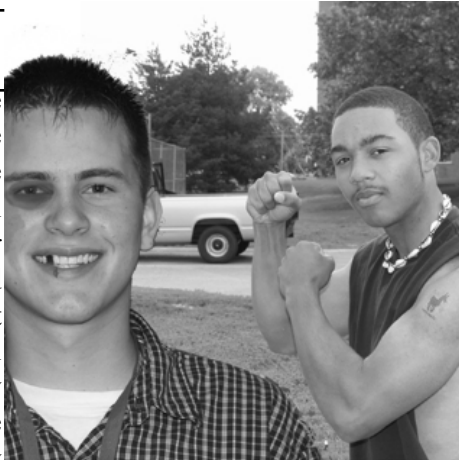

Maxwell K.O.'s Bleeker in Debate

Adam Deines
Kyle, Marshall

The Debate for state executive positions was the proverbial "nail in the coffin" for the Federalists and especially Federalist Gubernatorial hopeful, Casey Bleeker. The Nationalist party won in every category except the Secretary of State and the uncontested Commissioner of Insurance.

The program was opened with a five minute long KSU plug. Following that, the candidates were asked two questions, given one minute to respond, their opponent was then given another minute to respond, then each was given thirty seconds of rebuttal time. The highlight of the whole debate was most definitely the gubernatorial debate. This section of the program was structured a bit differently. The candidates were asked a total of four questions and then they were given the same amount of time for response and rebuttal.

During the middle of some of his speeches and at the end of all of them, Maxwell was given a rousing ovation. The biggest ovation came after a statement Maxwell made in one of his rebuttal speeches. Bleeker had just accused Maxwell of having conservative views on many subjects. In response, Maxwell stated that the primaries were the previous day and he also said that, "Today's election is about who is the better leader." This elicited a standing ovation from many and at least applause from most. When asked how he felt about the impact of the debate on the outcome of the election, Maxwell responded, "I think the debate was really important, because it was the last chance for the people to see our views."

On the other side were the more "conservative" speeches of Casey Bleeker. Casey did receive applause from many at the end of most of his speeches, but nothing came close to the decibel level reached after Maxwell's speeches. The most Bleeker ever received in the middle of his speeches was some mumbles and grumbles when he quoted George Orwell's fictional book about where he thought the world was headed in the early 20th century. Bleeker even went so far as to call some crimes "thought crime." Despite the lack of enthusiasm, Bleeker was hopeful after the debate. "The crowd was a little unresponsive. I hope that it is because conservatives are just that much more conservative," said Bleeker.

There was a lighter side to the debate also. Nationalist candidate for Secretary of State, William Pruet, proposed a theme park called "Nut World." Nut World, featuring Stevie Squirrel and Stacey Squirrelette, was Pruet's answer to how he was going to draw tourism to the state.

The debate today seemed to sway many Federalists to vote for the Nationalists. Michael Popelka from Lane City in Marshall County expressed the feelings of many Federalist's. He said, "I liked some of the candidates from the other party. They were more prepared."

Rodent Scandal

Hale Sloan
Aylward, Bradley County

It has come to this reporter's attention from unnamed sources that scandal is running amok. As early as Monday the intricate workings of a governmental mole were burrowing throughout this political caucus. A group of progressive Federalists recruited a high rollin', big pimpin' Nationalist to report the inner workings of the Nationalists party. Even the use of taped conversations and videophones in this operation may have had an impact on the outcome of yesterday's election and have effects seen through out the week. I was given some information about the mole for those concerned. The pseudonym Amish O'Malley will be used for the mole that has infiltrated Nationalists party. Mr. O'Malley has been previously linked to the Chinese Triads, Bolivian Chicken Cult and the Antarctic Society of Artic Hares. All of these associations have had massive political influence in their respective states. Now his epidemic has traveled to the oasis of your city, county and even state. Amish was raised from corruption. His parent's political affiliation began as liberal. Then in the mid 80's they converted to right wing tip conservatives. The last move was to create the communistic party of capitalists. These drastically altering events may have influenced the skewed political views Amish holds dear. It is believed that his ethical absence contributes to treasonous ideals. Unnamed sources stated, "Although, these unethical actions may not earn many banner points, individual party success is the key for triumph." Also a reminder was given to inform all political meeting "bouncers" that identification badges that go unchecked is the first step to failure. This breaking piece of hot pie is almost fully digested but if you have any other scandalous stories of the utmost importance the newspaper would be happy to assist in the possible publication of more corruption.

Wednesday's Blue Shirt Best Buddy

Andy Boyd
King County, Hiatt City

The winner of today's highly touted and prestigious "Blue Shirt of the Day" is the Events staff's very own Eric Wood. Any one who has met Eric would consider him "unique," however most would refer to him as "special" and all that that entails. These traits qualify Eric for our exalted award. Although when asked why he deserves such honors, Eric responded with, "I drive a black station wagon."

Besides driving such a popular automobile, Eric enjoys many aspects of the college life here on the prominent Kansas State University campus. Among those are attending social occasions and events with the occasional alcoholic beverage (for social purposes only.) When not celebrating the peace with his friends and peers, Eric spends much time studying for his boring major Geography, and even MORE time engulfing himself in his more exciting minor, which is Female Anatomy.

While during his stater year of 2000, Eric was elected as King County Commissioner. On the fun-o-meter, Eric places the stater experience about as much fun as being a counselor. His goals for this session of Boys' State are to "eat, sleep, breathe, and excrete Boys' State." Somewhere on that busy schedule, Eric has the admirable desires to "become the Events Staff 'MonkeyBoy'." Wow, what an ambitious and dedicated staff member! When asked about his peers, Eric stated that Mike Zimmers was his favorite counselor because "he made me feel all tingly inside."

Lastly, in our ongoing battle in the "War Without Women," and the newspaper staff's pledge to combat that, Eric offered some different and definitely personal advice and tactics. "I take very long, hot showers and use a lot of soap," replied Eric about his "personal" efforts in the "War Without Women." We on the Newspaper Staff pity you if you should be in line behind Eric for a morning shower.

So when you see Eric, congratulate him for winning the "Blue Shirt of the Day Award," with a hearty handshake, unless of course he just got out of the shower.

From Bangkok, Thailand to Hays, Kansas

Andy Boyd
King County, Hiatt City

Boys' Staters from our southwest par of the state had at most an eight hour drive to attend this 66th session of Boys' State. For Chawin Anannatsiri, a trip from Hays meant about a three-hour drive to get to Manhattan. But then it was a 10-hour flight to get to Hays from his hometown of Bangkok Thailand. Gwen, as he is referred to around King County is wrapping up his high school career at Thomas Moore Prep in Hays. After attending freshman year in Montana, Gwen returned to Thailand for his sophomore year. But he was told because he was a part of the exchange program, he would have to repeat his freshman year in Thailand. As part of the foreign exchange program, you can only attend one year of public school. If you wish to continue in the American Education system you must enter in a private school.

So Gwen enrolled in TMP and stays on campus at the dorms. While he says the dorms are smaller than the ones at Boys' State, it is nice because everyone in the dorms is close and it creates a small family and community to make up for the one left at home. He says that the hardest thing to adjust to is the atmosphere of being completely alone, and away from friends and family. Because Gwen proclaims himself as shy, it took him some time to get comfortable in his new setting.

For Gwen, Saturday will bring mixed feelings. While concluding Boys' State, he will also be leaving for Bangkok to see his friends and family for the first time since Christmas. If you see Gwen around the campus, say hi and wish him well.

State

Terrifying Revelations

Todd Vogts, Editor In Chief
Janssen, MacArthur

Look out Boys' State! There are some strange goings on around here. There are people branching out. There are people listening to Robert Frost and choosing the road less traveled. They are doing this in many different ways. One such way is creating their own associations. One such association is The Association of Anti-Terrorist

Election Scandal

Adam Deines
Kyle, Marshall County

Another lawsuit will be filed today, but this is not the same type of frivolous lawsuit that we have all grown used to here at Boys' State, especially those of us at the newspaper. This lawsuit is actually legitimate in the eyes of many Staters. Craig Kearney is suing for compensation from the state after his name was mistakenly excluded from the Federalist Secretary of State primary ballot.

Kearney and his attorneys, Josh Tario and Kelly Williams, both of Lane City in Marshall County, spent all morning yesterday petitioning associations, city councils, county commissions, and individual staters, just trying to get their story out.

Their story is as follows. Kearney accepted the nomination from the Marshall County Federalists to run for Secretary of State in the primary elections. He, just like all the other primary candidates, campaigned Sunday

Security for the State of Kansas.

The Association of Anti-Terrorist Security for the State of Kansas, or A.A.T.S.S.K. for short, was founded by Tony Joseph Sasastizado of Haney in Kennedy County. Hisco-founders include: Michael Donald (Finnly, Kennedy), Nathan Waller (Chastain, Eisenhower), and John Waller (Aylward, Bradley).

The A.A.T.S.S.K. was created "To promote anti-terrorist security throughout the state of Kansas. To work with state agencies to solve terrorist concerns and problems, and possible terrorist targets. To protect American culture, life style, heritage, ideals, and the American way of life;" according to the A.A.T.S.S.K.'s mission statement.

This new association has many views. In fact, it appears that this association has a view on everything. They have a view on education, minority & religion, economy, health, night and participated in the Whistle Stop Tour. However, there was a computer error and Kearny along with some other candidates, including Federalist primary winner, Brad Cox were left off the ballot. A new ballot was made with the excluded candidates included, except Kearney was listed under Commissioner of Insurance instead of Secretary of State, the office he was running for. By the time the mistake was noticed, it was too late. Now, Kearny is suing the state for monetary compensation only, realizing that a re-vote would be impossible. "I'm not asking for my position back, I just want compensation," Kearney said. Kearney and his attorneys are now waiting until all of the state's elected officials are in place and have established a budget before they decide on a dollar amount and file suit.

After his support drive yesterday morning, Kearney felt very good about his success in gaining support from local governments and associations in order to add some clout behind his suit. Nearly every group that he and his layers visited expressed support. Some even offered to help fund his cause.

Two of the biggest proponents of the cause are Kearney's home county, Marshall and the Lane City Council. "The county commission is very eager to support us," said primary counsel, Josh industry & big business, agriculture, personal security, statewide security, and corrections & rehab. This association seems very well planned. They seem to have all of the bases covered.

However, they are not the only association that has been created. Staters' Union has caught wind of the fact that there are a few other associations in the wood works. It almost seems as though the extremists are beginning to "rise and report." Is this what the state needs? Are these associations going to be false prophets spouting off false revelations? Are these associations merely creating themselves because they didn't win any other office? Are created associations going to end up over running the state because people would rather just force their opinions on the rest of the state instead of trying to come to terms with their elected officials?

It shall be seen. It shall be seen.

Tario. The Marshall county commission verified their full support of Kearney and his suit and offered monetary support if needed, as did the Lane City Council. Other big-name backers included the Heritage Association and the Association of Cities and Counties. The Federalist precinct committee chairman was unable to offer comment because of a pending Supreme Court nomination.

When asked what exactly happened, Marshall County Counselor, Casey McBride, replied, "We really haven't got to the bottom of it to figure out what caused the error." "Don't blame us counselors," added Lane City Counselor, Brian Shea, "It's a small mistake, it happens every year and the people can get money out of it."

There were some who thought that the suit was unjustified. Federalist Gubernatorial Candidate, Casey Bleeker, had this to say. "You can't get a monetary fund for what it is worth. He should sue for re-election, but since it is only a weeklong mock-up, he can't. He shouldn't sue the state."

No matter what side of the issue the people interviewed were on, they all considered the mistake a tough break for Kearney. The level of sympathy and agreement with his case is what really separated the different groups.

Fake and Bitter the Losers of the Primary Elections

Brady Blevins
Whorley, Seitz County

Nine lucky candidates proceeded to yesterday's general elections, leaving in their wake over sixty people who weren't so lucky. The winners, and losers, were announced at Monday night's retreat. As those nine selected individuals went on to run for the state office, the rejected sixty had to look for work.

Many losers went on to acquire appointed positions. MacArthur resident Chris Burger landed a job as the assistant to the insurance commissioner. The seemingly awkward situation left him working for his rival and the ultimate winner, Eric Buell of Powell County. In what seemed like a moment of bitterness, he claimed that the voters weren't informed in the insurance business.

Another candidate finding an appointed office is Tyler Davis whose plans since losing the race for Attorney General include a hopeful election to the Supreme Court and lots of sleep. Davis's loss was particularly disheartening for him because he viewed the winning candidate so poorly. Davis, a Powell County resident, claimed Keithley Lake "just played to what the people wanted. He had no opinions of his own."

He wasn't the only candidate somewhat bitter about his loss. Cory Standridge, a losing treasurer candidate, thought his loss was "crap." He claimed that the victor of his race, Jon Hooker, won because of his amusing last name. Trying to convince himself of his popularity, he claimed, "I could win too if my last name were 'Slut'." Sure he could.

With all of these complaining candidates, it seems that many views are formed on a basis of bitterness. Just because they didn't win, many feel like they have to pronounce the uselessness of the person whom the people did elect. Talk about sore losers!

Alternately, there are the people who are still in a political state of mind, even if they aren't in a race. Former gubernatorial candidate Brock Banks, in true political fashion, conceded that Mardell Maxwell, the winning Nationalist candidate, was in fact the better man for the job. His sincerity and candor exceeded that of many others.

As Monday night came to an end, it proved to be disappointing to many. And whether they took the low road of bitterness or the equally low road of insincerity, they will move on from this and probably fade into oblivion.

To All Nationalist Party Affiliated and American Legion Members:

We the people of the Federalist Party within Boys' State do hereby extend our apologies and condolences for the rebuttal received through the paper on 03 June 2003. An unknown affiliate of the Federalist Party, known only to us as "Pujay" condemned the work of the Nationalist Party and even went as far to calling them "Nazis." The party of Federalists here at Boys' State does not condone his actions or his words. We (the Federalist Party) are men of honor and distinction, and not that of treason or disrespect. We realize the hardships of those in the Legion who fought against the tyrannical dictatorship of Adolph Hitler and his evil affiliates, and we do not want to offend any member of the Legion or Boys' State. If anyone within Boys' State can identify "Pujay" or offer information, we will reward them with 50 Boys' State dollars. Those with information please contact Mark Nelson of Pershing County, Joseph Clay of Seitz County, or Charles Collins of Patton County.

From the Federalist Party, we thank you.

Five minutes early is on time. On time is late. Late is dead. Makes sense, I suppose. In fact, that is probably a good way to do things, but it leaves very little time to stray from the schedule that appears to be set into stone. One such thing that seems to have to take a back seat is personal cleanliness.

In the schedule there is a time after Recreation that is designated "Free Time." A time that, in my humble opinion, would mean that a Stater could do whatever they want. However, this does not seem to be the case. Instead of getting to spend our "Free Time" taking a nice hot shower after a hard day of recreation, we have to spend our "Free Time" traveling at painfully slow speeds back to our counties. By the time we arrive back home, there is no time left to do anything but be five minutes early to our next appointment. No showers for us! "Free Time" is a bunch of crap!

To me it seems as though all of the powers that be wish us to smell like a bunch of farmyard animals. By the end of the week, the ensuing stench from the lack of bathing would be suffocating!

The way I see it, with wake-up and readiness required by 7am, and lights out at 11pm and the counselors saying you cannot shower after lights out, the daily schedule needs to accommodate time to freshen up a bit.

All it really comes down to is that without proper bathing the funky smell will cause us to seem like animals that have rolled around in their own fecal matter. This cannot be a good image for Boys' State to be producing. The Boys' State program is big on order, discipline, and respect. Let's show the city of Manhattan a little respect and remember: "Cleanliness is next to Godliness."

Brilliant Maneuverings

Jeff Thompson

There really is no way to put this gently. The Nationalist mopped the floor with the Federalist candidates. The ill-prepared Federalist candidates were embarrassed again and again. To be exact it's not so much that the Federalist candidates were shown up by Nationalist, its more like they managed to shoot themselves in the foot. Its kind of like terrorism isn't about hate; it is an act of well...hatred. Also I just couldn't bring myself to vote for someone who confessed he had not even really looked at the budget. Brilliant. Also there is the profiling speech. Enough said. We were all carried away by the charismatic speeches of the federalist candidates.

It is pretty safe to say the Nationalist party was just a tad bit better prepared. Thanks to stupid speeches and brainless tactics, the Federalist candidates were remarkably successful persuading people into voting outside the Federalist Party. No, its not that the idea of the Nationalist party were that much better, they were not even all that different, but they came to the plate with the ability to coolly and calmly say what they actually meant. I don't know what it was, it could have been the pressure, or maybe they just did not prepare. Whatever the case, overall the Nationalist had the Federalists outgunned. The Federalist Party was, "ensnared in a quagmire" of stupidity.

Another thing that I noticed at the debate is certain candidates were quick to criticize their opponents for agreeing with their policies. I guess they assumed that a liberal must strictly follow all liberal views. In fact I believe that is why Mardell Maxwell appealed to so many voters, his views were not so liberal that he pushed Federalist voters away. Maxwell is flexible enough for the conservatives and should be able to get things done. Even so, the Federalist need not despair; they still hold a majority in both houses.

Honestly, the fact that many voters crossed the line to support the minority part did not surprise me. I did not exactly get a "United Front" vibe coming out of the Federalist rally two nights ago. Beside those feeling, the arrogant actions of several of the Federalist candidates prior to the debate were enough to get me leaning towards the Nationalist party for leadership. This article is finished because I can't find anymore synonyms for dumb to describe the Federalist approach.

"Big Daddy," that ogre like Lieutenant Governor Candidate, stood up and publicly chastised me at the Precinct Meeting today. Why? I called the Nats Nazis, but I didn't mean that they actually supported the persecution of the Jews; it was merely a paradoxical link between the psyches of the Nats and that of the Nazis.

Idiots with loud voices bully, they do not lead, and Casey Bleeker has enlisted a thug as his second in command. His popularity fueled him through the primaries; however, in this patriot's eyes he is a coward and a "yes" man.

After watching the debate, I believe that rape is not necessarily a hate crime, and therefore the Nationalists do not necessarily hate the Feds just because of the raping that we called a debate. As a patriot, I will now support the new state order, the Nationalists, in many of their views.

County Press Releases

VOTE YES!

Attention Kennedy county citizens!

The County Commission needs your help to pass this proposal to rebuild highways and bridges. We need your votes and donations to make this possible. Thanks to those who have already donated and vote yes on this proposal.

Seitz County has proposed to replace one of the old bridges with a new one and fix the entire highway, except for one section that needs replaced. We will be putting tollbooths on the bridge and highway to help pay and we will apply for bonds. Please support our highway construction.

MacArthur County Commission would like to address the people of Jardon, Janssen, and Icenogle. The people of MacArthur County will be voting on the County Highway Plan on Friday. The County Highway Plan consists of a new toll bridge, replacement of a two-inch strip of heavily damaged highway, and a new statewide highway system. The Industrial Association will pay for the bridge. The county will pay for the replacement of the strip of highway. The exact expense of the statewide highway system is currently unknown. When these expenses are determined, they will also be paid in part by the county.

Marshall County Commission has proposed to its citizens the building of a new 2 lane highway and paved road. We had also proposed the rebuilding of a bridge and making it into a toll bridge.

The two-lane highway will split the city of Klassen for 1/3 of the city. After the highway, our paved road will continue south through the rest of Klassen and split the cities of Lane and Kyle.

Our two-lane highway will cost $200 for the 1/3 of Klassen and the paved road will total $375 to be built into the other cities. The toll bridge will total $545 and will be placed on the north side of our two-lane highway. The proposal totals to be $1120.00.

The toll bridge and highways are badly needed and they will benefit the whole county. They will be paid by the county through the donations of our citizens and earnings off the toll bridge.
